- The principle behind this methodology is to pinpoint the driving force responsible for generating transformation.
- It's aim is to identify the dynamics underlying the developing trends.
- These dynamics are the hidden assumptions behind changes.

In the 1880's – there were 34,000 Jews and 330,000 Arabs in the Land of Israel. The Jews made up 10%

The great historian, Dubnow, was negatively impressed by the flow of immigrants of the First Aliyah, and predicted that by the year 2000 there would be only 500,000 Jews in the Land.

At the end of the First World War, the population included 55,000 Jews and 500,000 Arabs. The 1:10 ratio was maintained.

On the day the Independence was declared, on May 15, 1948, there were 600,000 Jews and 980,000 Arabs.

The Chief Statistician at the time, Roberto Bacchi, recommended postponing the declaration of the State, out of fear that the demographic problem would end the State's existence. Ben-Gurion ignored him.

About 20 years later, Levi Eshkol chose to ignore the later to be debunked warning after the Six-Day War, that by 1987 there would be an Arab majority west of the Jordan.

1995...2000...2005...2015...2020...2025...2035...2045...2050...2055...2060...2065

A nation cannot exist long enough without a collective covenant of a mission!

The establishment of Israel was based on a covenant of destiny drawing from millennia of Jewish history.

The people of Israel will be able to generate a new covenant of mission for a “viable Jewish modern and democratic” state only after the majority of the Jewish people will reside in Israel.
